Telefax Directory by Institution (complete information)

Telefax Directory by City (Abbreviated information)

Telefax Directory by MLC Code (Abbreviated information)

INTRODUCTION

The MHSLSA Technology Directory provides information on who in selected Michigan health science libraries has what computer hardware and software. It is intended to provide those of us who are considering purchasing a given piece of equipment or software, access to individuals who can give advice, criticism, etc., on the item under consideration. The Directory also includes a telefascimile directory.

The Technology Directory was compiled from the responses to the survey sent out in June, 1987. Information in the Directory reflects who responded to the survey and does not list what is available in all Michigan health sciences libraries. We intend to update the Directory at regular intervals, in order to keep the information contained in it as current as possible. We expect that the telefascimile section of the Directory will change more rapidly than the other sections.

The Directory was compiled using the Nutshell database management software. Special thanks go to Judy Barnes, who designed the database and input the relevant survey data; and to Sparrow Hospital and St. Joseph Mercy Hospital of Pontiac, for their support in this endeavor.

TO UPDATE THIS DIRECTORY:

To keep this directory as up to date as possible, please submit changes or corrections to the Technology Committee either by correcting a copy of the appropriate page or by using the enclosed blank record to add new information.

Send updates, corrections and new information to:

Compact Disk Read Only Memory: a computer peripheral that uses an optical laser disk to store large amounts of data for later retrieval. The capacity may be in the range of 500 megabytes or about 250,000 typewritten pages.

Circulation software:

Program designed to be used to manage and control circulation of library materials.

Communications software:

Program which works with the modem to dial and communicate with other computers.

Contact:

Person in a library to contact for technology information and/or help.

CPU:

Central Processing Unit: the brain or memory of the computer. The CPU contains circuits that execute instructions and control other units.

Database software:

Program to manage input and retrieval and maintenance of information in a file; an organized system of data including indexes or other access methods.

End-user terminal:

Computer terminal available for library clients (the end-user) to use for their own or library supplied software.

Front end software:

Program that translates ordinary English input into the host computer's command language.

FTE:

Full time employee or full time equivalent if some employees work part time.

Graphics software:

Program for creating or editing pictures, charts or illustrations. Includes drawing, moving rotating and enlarging items on the screen.

Hard disk:

Storage device that uses rigid disk with a magnetic surface to store data. Much greater storage capacity and access speed than floppy disks. For this survey the size is indicated in megabytes.

Hardware:

Physical equipment in a computer system.

Integrated software:

Programs designed to interact with other components or modules to share information.

Integrated system:

Usually more than one workstation organized to perform multiple functions.

Intolerability loan software:

Program which handles the processing and production of interlibrary loans and which may generate statistics.

Keyboard:

Most common input device for computers. Uses standard typewriter key layout.

Labels software:

Program which is used to produce book or address labels.

LAN:

Local Area Network: collection of computers and/or peripherals connected to share data and common resources and possibly access other networks or remote hosts. Usually a LAN is also geographically confined and microcomputer based.

Modem:

Device used for communication between computers for transmission of data over phone lines.

Internal Modem - located within the computer.

External Modem - free standing modem connected via cable.

Monitor:

Visual display unit - basically a high-resolution television set without a speaker, channel selector or radio frequency receiver.

OCLC Download:

OCLC - Online Computer Library Center, Inc.
America's largest shared cataloging system.

Download - the process of transferring data from a remote system to your system, usually to disk.

Online catalog:

The traditional card catalog converted to a computer database.

Optical scanner:

Device which reads printed materials or photographs and converts the images into machine readable format for input into computer devices without manual keying.

PC:

Personal computer - a small, inexpensive, single user computer based on a microprocessor that is powerful enough to perform useful processing.

Printer type:

Refers to brand of printer.

Public catalog:

Traditional card catalog converted to a computer database accessible by library users

Serials control software:

Program designed to control serials information and generally replaces the cardex.

Software:

Generic term for any program or programs that control the operation of the computer.

Library applications - Programs designed to perform library functions. (i.e. serials)

General office - Programs designed to used in a variety of situations, usually in business. (i.e. word processing)

Spreadsheet software:

Business applications program designed for budgeting or other problem solving computations such as statistics.

Telefax machine:

Device which converts printed materials or photographs to machine readable codes and transmits the codes via telephone lines to a like device which again converts the codes to printed format.

Terminal:

Any combination of an input device that is connected to a computer or other information system. For most, terminals consist of keyboards and video display terminals and may or not be microcomputers.

2400 Baud capability:

Baud rate refers to the speed of transmission; 2400 baud is the speed of 2400 bits per second or 240 characters per second. Currently 2400 is the maximum reliable transmission rate of the average voice-grade telephone line.

Word processing software:

Program designed to enter, edit, format and print textual documents.

Workstation:

Place where work is done, as in terminal workstation; the desk or table, chair and other furniture to support use of a terminal.
